The current Malaysian tax regime traces its origins to the 1960s where primary production was the main economic activity. The tax regime has been amended piecemeal over the years especially during Malaysia's decades of industrialization.

However, as the global economic dynamics continue to evolve, Malaysia needs to reinvent itself in order to continue providing for the aspirations of its citizens as well as reach a developed nation status. What form should a new tax regime take in order to be able to help the nation meet its full potential? The distinguished panel will share their thoughts and discuss how best a tax reform should be effected in Malaysia.
